My personal exception to this rule is with paper towels and toilet paper, as they hold up better, but many people don't seem to mind the generic options. So if generic products are not as good as brand-name products, are they at least good enough? If you can't, consider an allergy medication with an added decongestant. I buy Heinz rather than generic products, because I buy very little ketchup and 50 cents saved over six months is not worth it to me and my budget. I try to use real plates and silverware instead of paper plates, but sometimes that isn't possible. Pick up a box of Claritin and you'll see that the active ingredient is loratadine, which you can also buy as a generic drug for a fraction of the price. The best and the worst. Claritin is long-acting, with effects that last for 24 hours.
